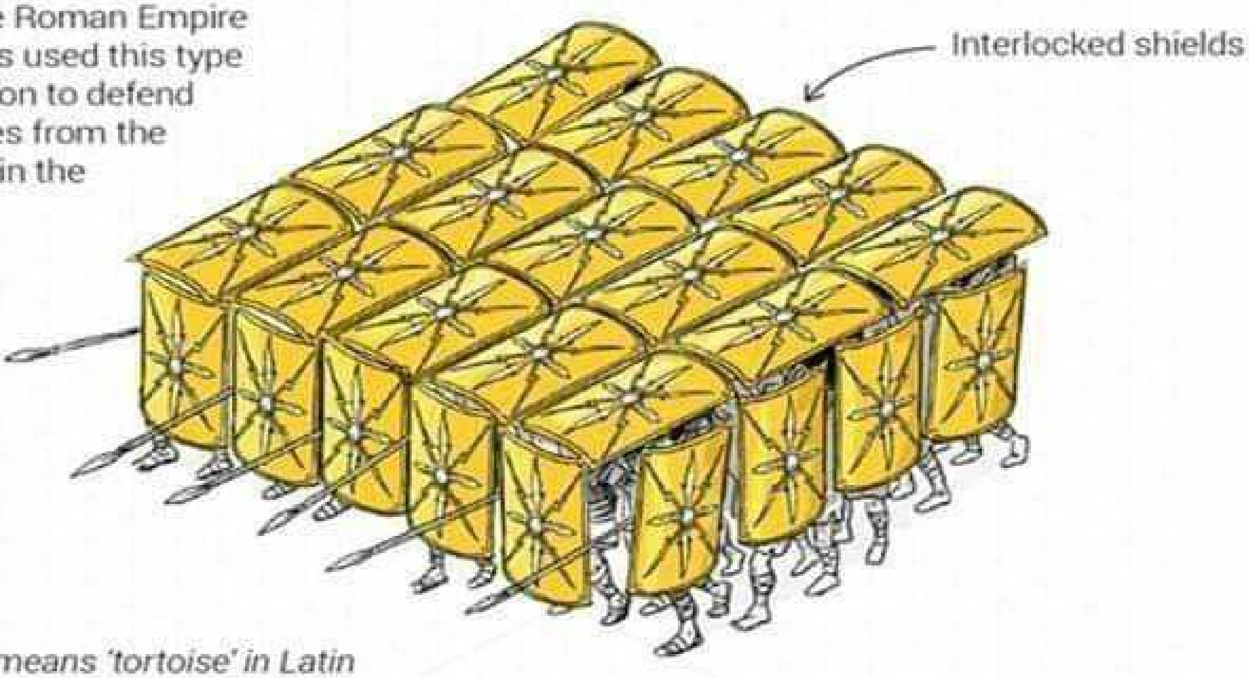
TESTUDO FORMATION

During the Roman Empire the legions used this type of formation to defend themselves from the attackers in the battle



Interlocked shields

*Testudo means 'tortoise' in Latin

UMBRELLA FORMATION

Protesters use testudo formation in their own way, umbrellas are used as shields to avoid pepper spray

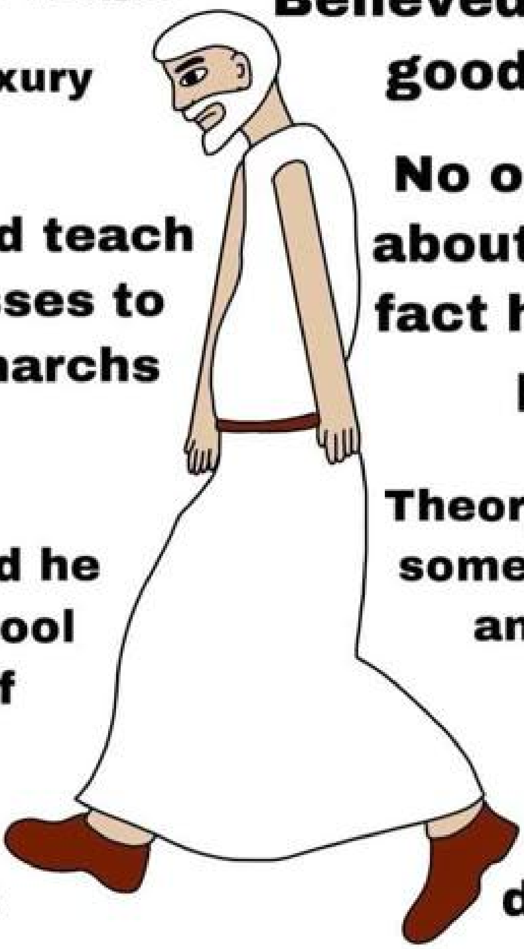
The Virgin Plato



Lived in luxury

Would teach classes to monarchs

So self-centered he named his school after himself

"Featherless Biped"

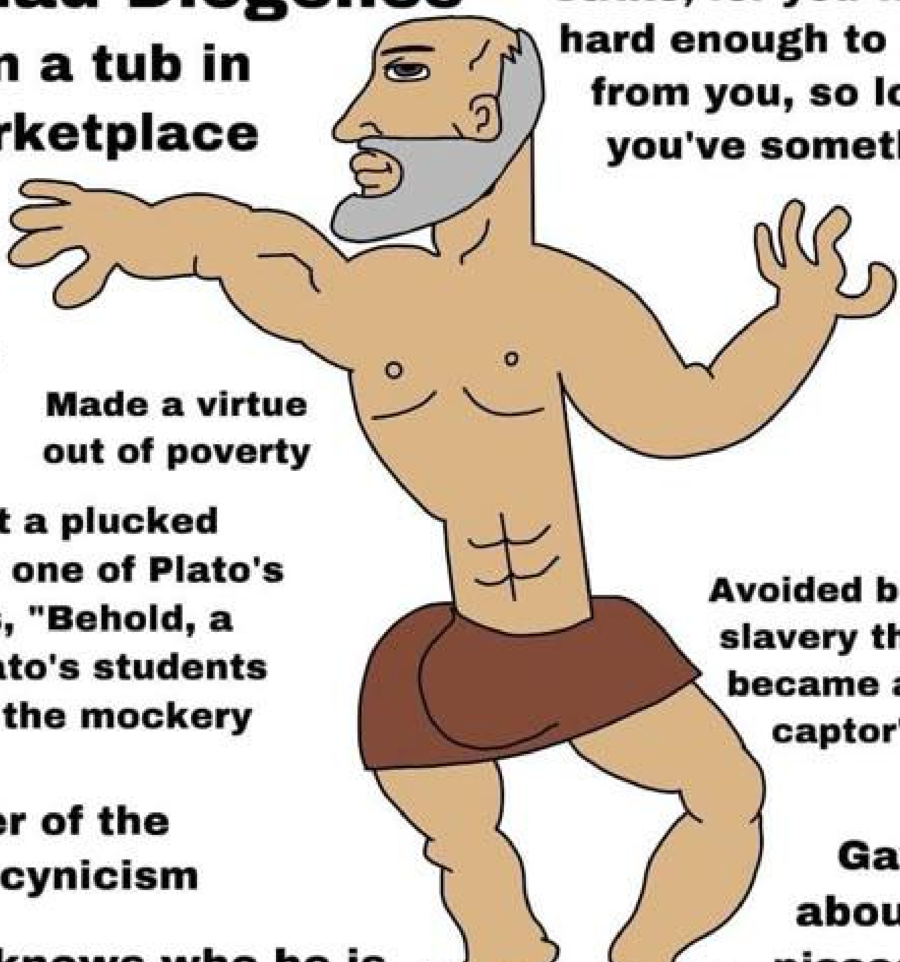
Believed in objective good and evil

No one knows much about him beyond the fact he was a famous philosopher

Theory of Forms relies on something being perfect and unchangeable

Was civilized, never even dared to protest society

The Chad Diogenes



Lived in a tub in the marketplace

Never held a class yet taught everyone his philosophy

Made a virtue out of poverty

Brought a plucked chicken to one of Plato's lectures, "Behold, a man!", Plato's students joined in the mockery

A founder of the school of cynicism

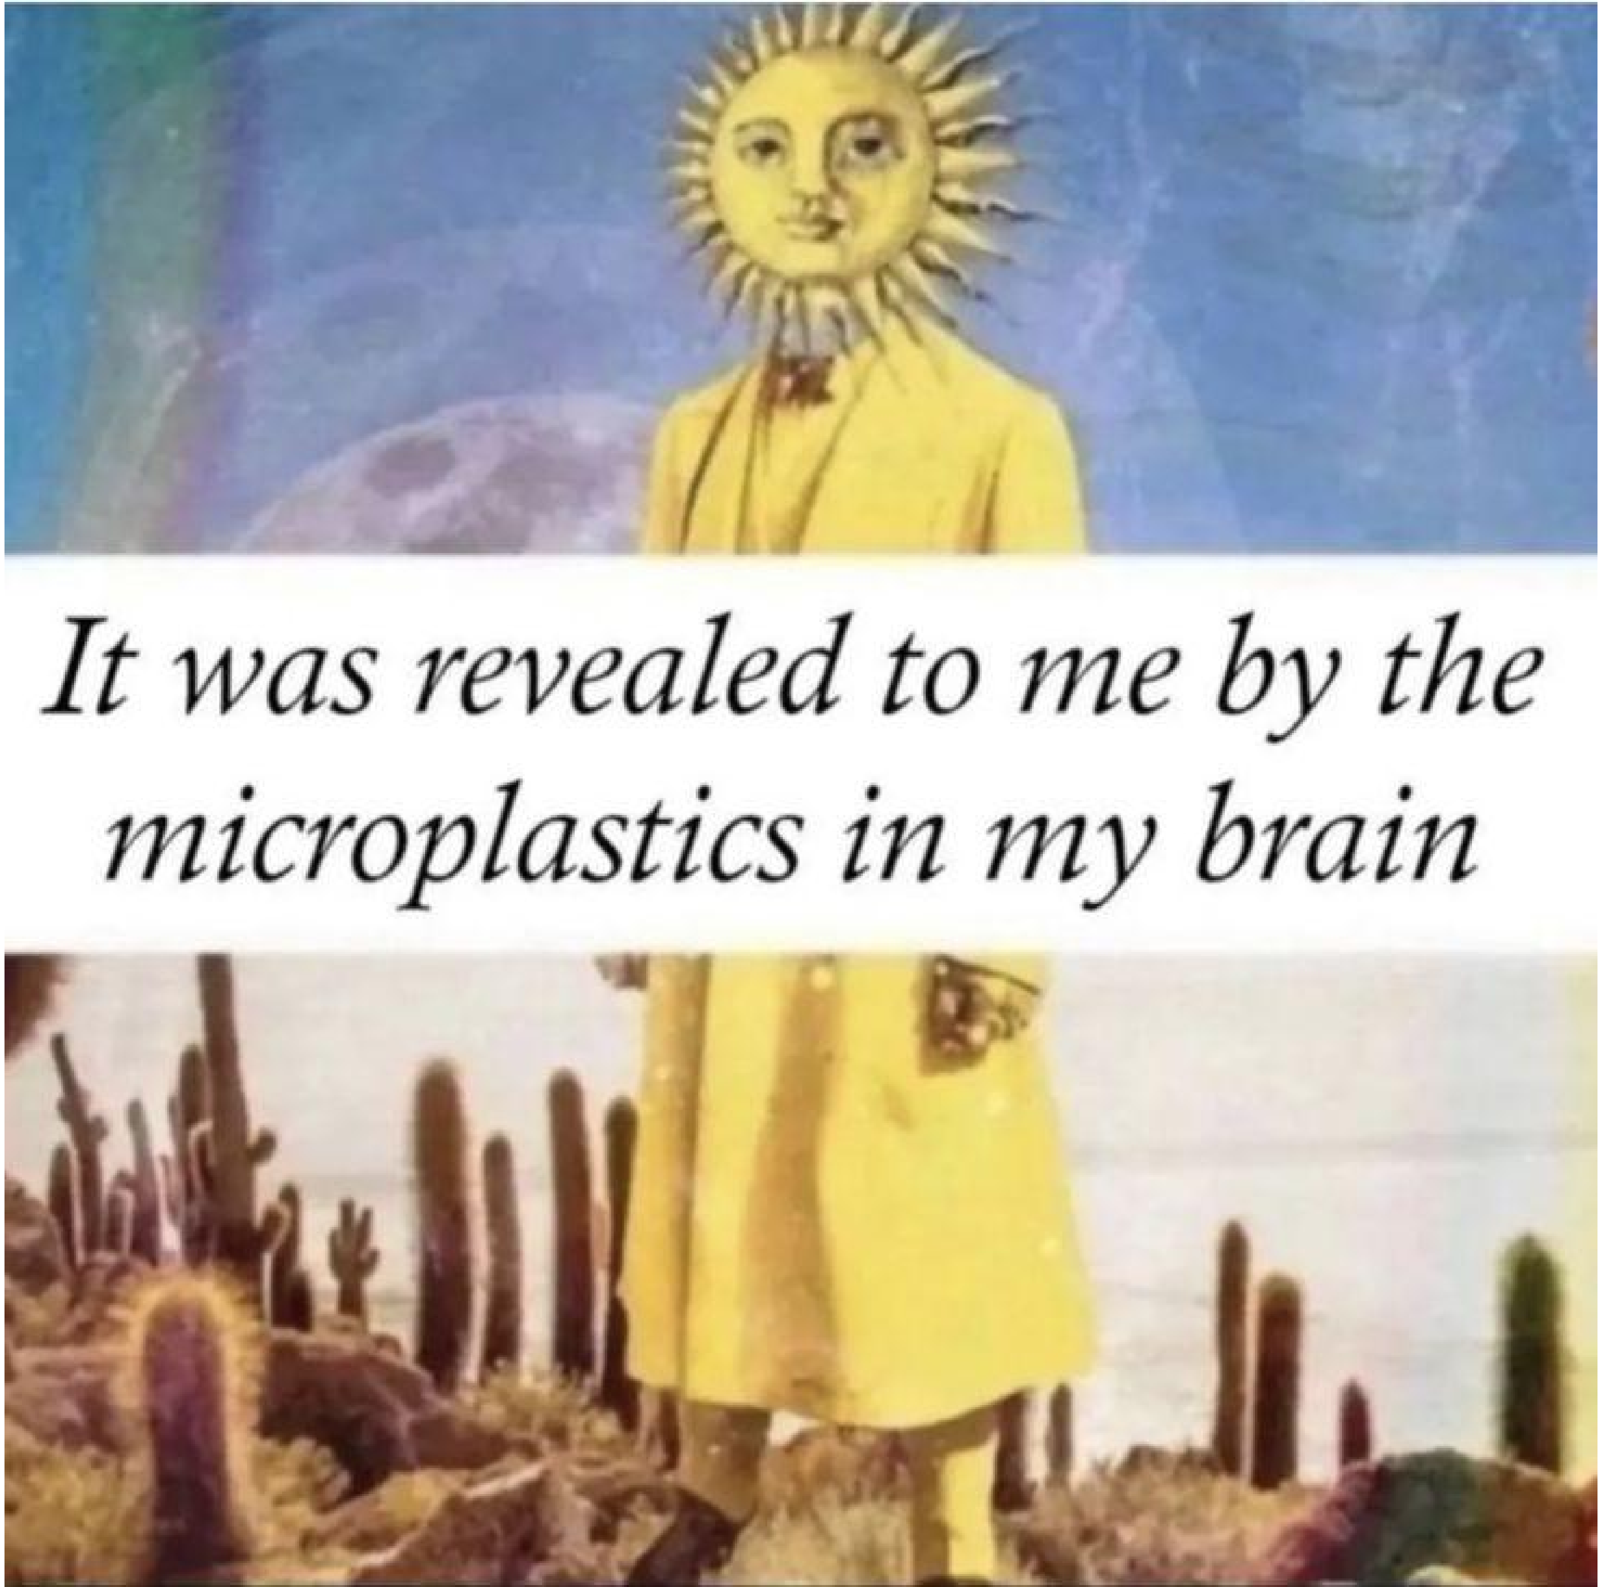
Everyone knows who he is and what he taught

"Strike, for you will find no wood hard enough to keep me away from you, so long as I think you've something to say."

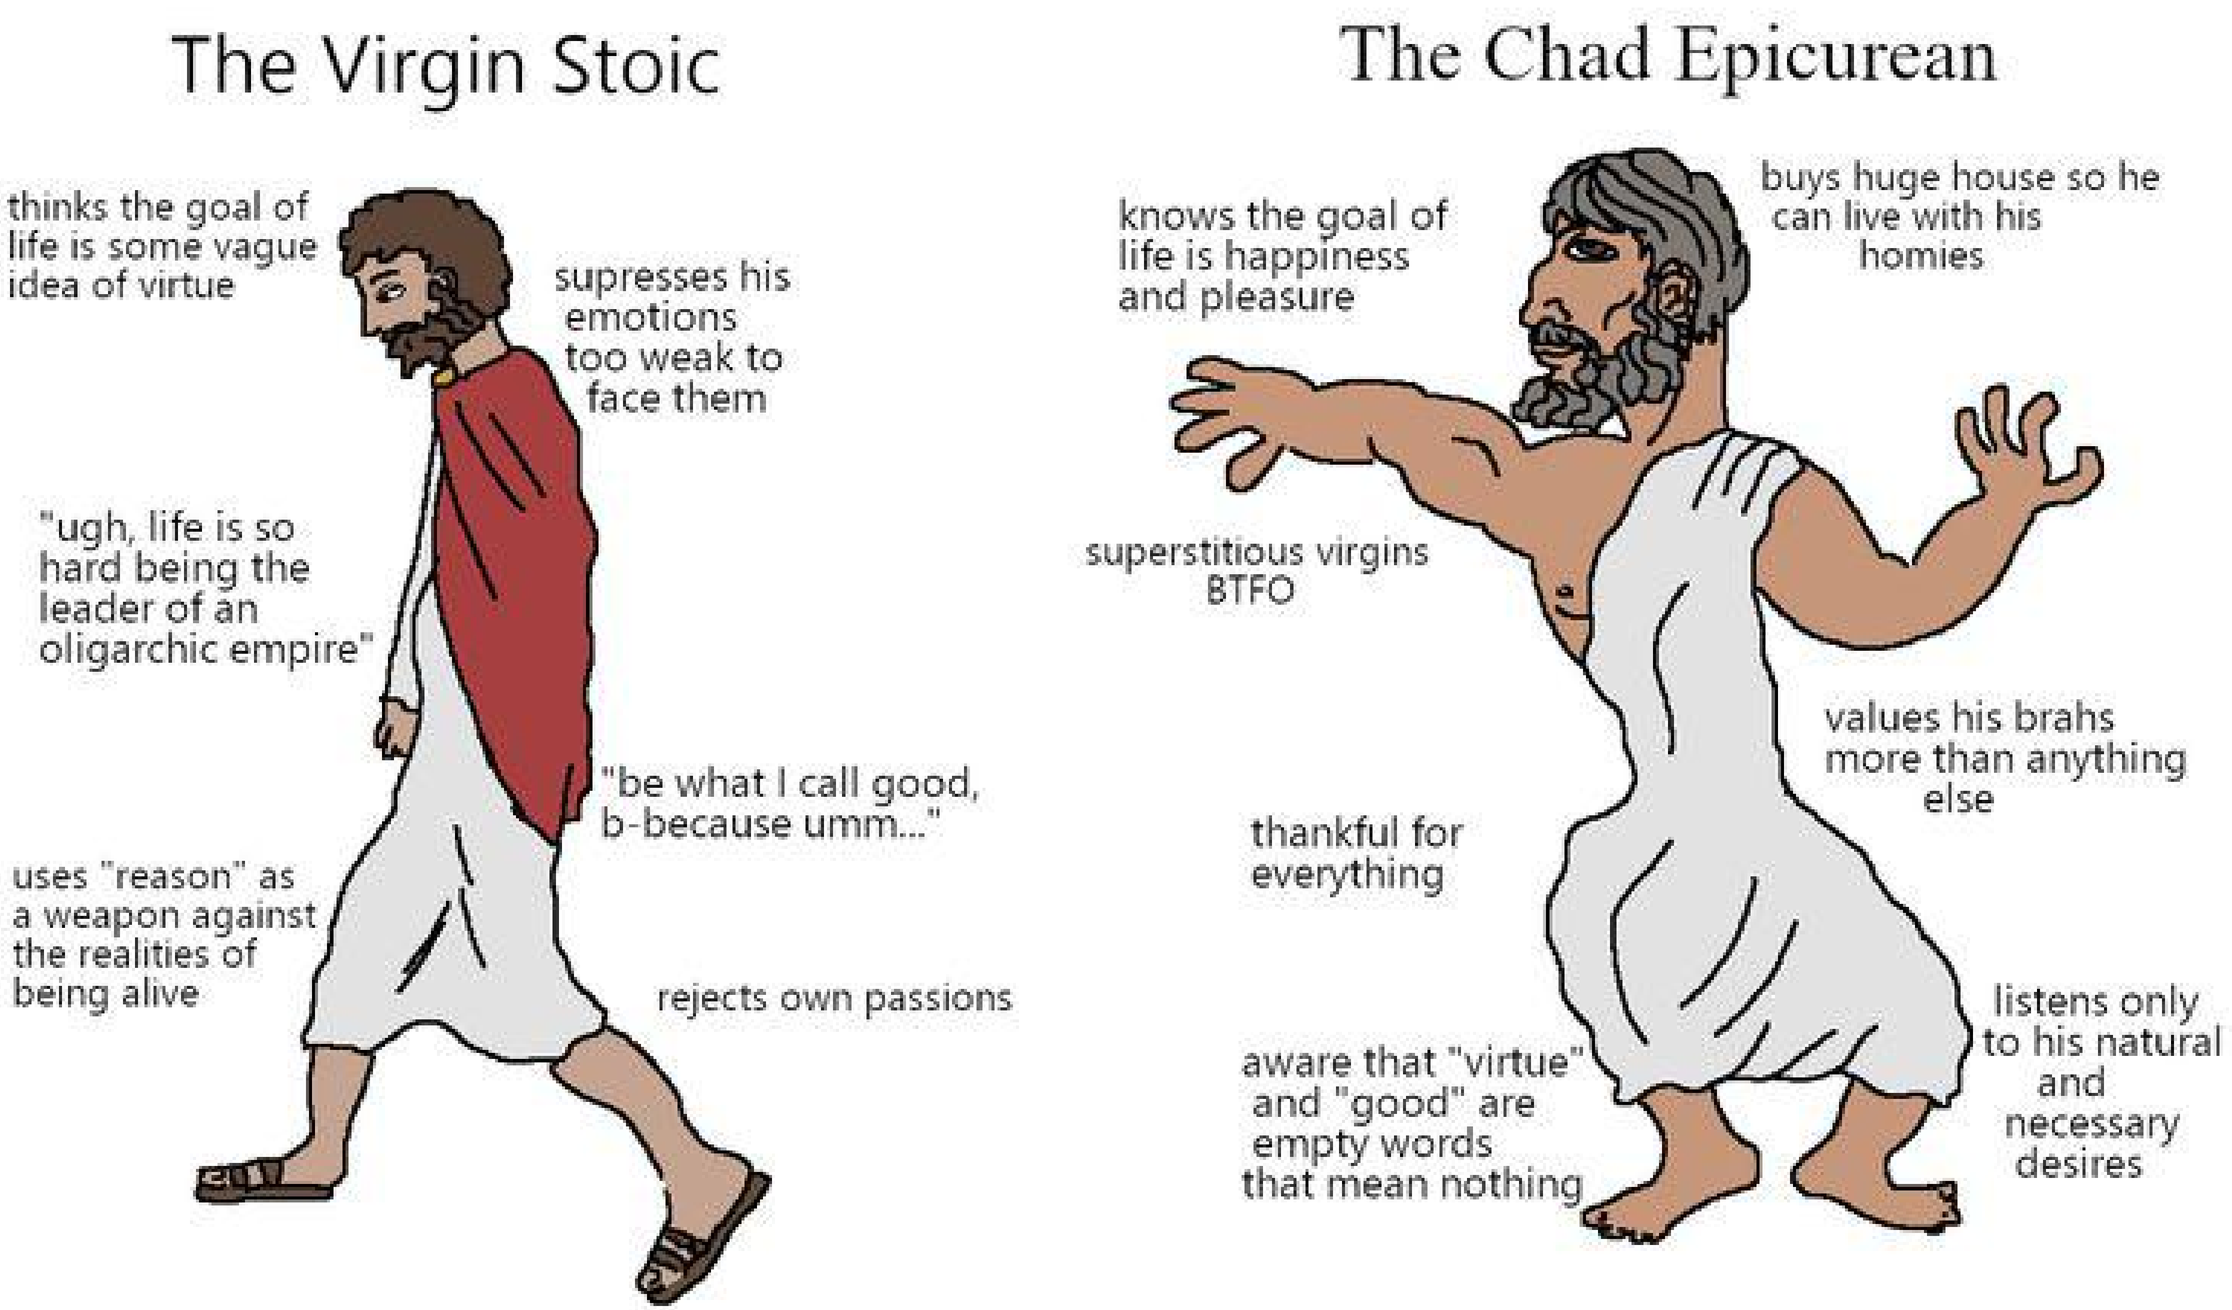
Held a lantern in the day, "I'm looking for an honest man"

Avoided being sold into slavery through a pun, became a tutor to his captor's children

Gave no shits about being civil, pissed on passerby to protest society



It was revealed to me by the microplastics in my brain



The Virgin Stoic

The Chad Epicurean

thinks the goal of life is some vague idea of virtue supresses his emotions too weak to face them
"ugh, life is so hard being the leader of an oligarchic empire"
"be what I call good, b-because umm..."
uses "reason" as a weapon against the realities of being alive rejects own passions knows the goal of life is happiness and pleasure buys huge house so he can live with his homies superstitious virgins BTFO values his brahs more than anything else thankful for everything aware that "virtue" and "good" are empty words that mean nothing listens only to his natural and necessary desires

@idontthinkthatsphilosophy
A materialist analysis of science will illuminate it as a mode of community life. Just as in other modes of community life, such as political structures or the choice between coffee and tea, choices regarding scientific theories are not the product of wholly rational choices—they are the result of a mix of both objective and subjective factors.
Noooooo, science is totally rational and objective.

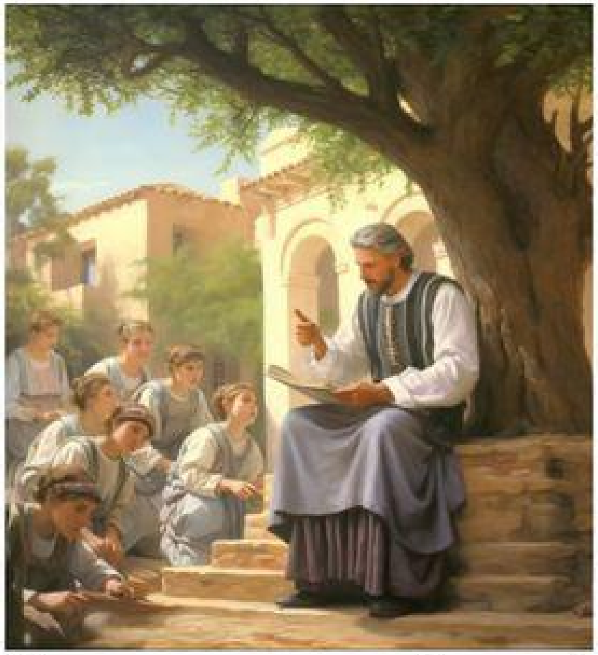
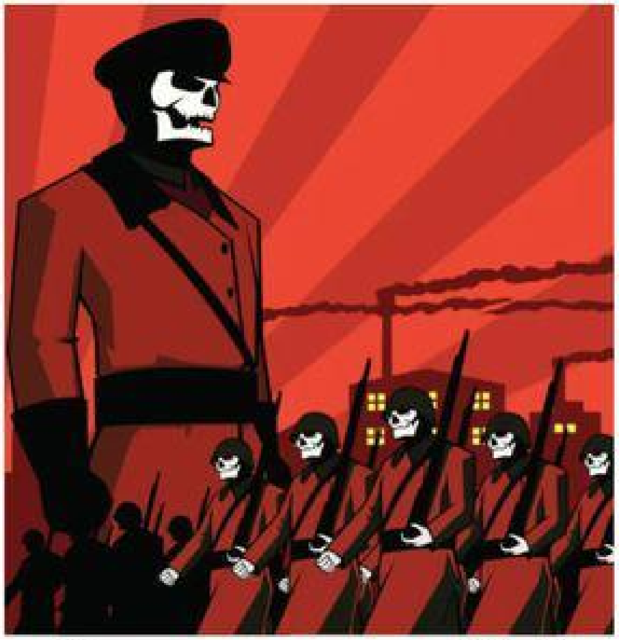
“Are you on the spectrum?”

Yeah, this one:



Humans are generally good and want to do good. Humanity can be saved through teaching reason, philosophy, critical thinking, and emotional intelligence.



Humans are selfish, hedonistic morons. Humanity is fucked. Burn it all and start over.

"In Steven Spielberg's 'Jaws' a shark starts to attack people on the beach. What does this attack mean? What does the shark stand for? There were different, even mutually exclusive answers to this question. On the one hand some critics claimed that obviously the shark stands for the foreign threat to ordinary Americans. The shark is a metaphor for either natural disaster, storms or immigrants threatening the United States citizens and so on. On the other hand it's interesting to know that Fidel Castro, who loves the film, once said that for him it was obvious that "Jaws" is kind of a leftist, Marxist film and that the shark is a metaphor for brutal, big capital exploiting ordinary Americans. So, which is the right answer? I claim none of them and at the same time all of them."
